Murdoch University is where free thinkers from all over the world come together to make a difference. We currently have more than 18,000 students and 1,400 staff working together, exploring new ways of thinking and making discoveries. We're proud of our national reputation for excellence in teaching, research and student satisfaction.

Murdoch University's School of Environmental Science is seeking applicants to fill a position as Lecturer in Environmental Science.

This position includes research and research student supervision responsibilities, teaching (unit coordination, lecturing, and laboratory/fieldwork), and administrative duties. The appointee will complement existing strengths within the School in both research and teaching. Applications will be accepted from candidates that can build capability in one or more of the School's research strengths in: landscape, terrestrial or wetland ecology, land and water management, marine science, or nature-based tourism. The appointee will be expected to make a significant contribution to teaching and research involving remote sensing, GIS, and spatial and statistical data analysis, including conservation planning and will need to have demonstrable skills in these areas. Applicants are expected to have a PhD in a relevant area with a developing record of refereed publications and competitive research grant acquisition. We are looking for an energetic scholar who is capable of working with students and staff in maintaining, and further developing, the strong teaching and research environment within the School.

Further information about this position can be obtained from the School Dean Assoc Prof John Bailey, phone 9360 2375 or by email at J.Bailey@murdoch.edu.au

Application procedures and a position description with detailed selection criteria are available from the University's web site at <http://jobs.murdoch.edu.au/>

Applicants are required to address the selection criteria within their application.
